

Regional Returns — European Union

1. Scope and ownership

Owner: Regional Customer Policy. Effective 2026-01-15. This fictional fixture describes how Negativex operations classify distance purchases in EU jurisdictions. It is an internal operating reference, not legal advice. The case record must identify customer location, order channel, product type, and the event date before a statutory rule is selected.

2. Withdrawal clock

For an in-scope distance purchase, the withdrawal period generally begins when the consumer or a nominated third party receives the goods. The order confirmation, carrier delivery event, and any split shipment are reviewed together. A support contact date is not substituted for the delivery event.

3. Standard goods

The regional baseline is a 14-day withdrawal period, subject to documented exceptions. The operator records whether the goods were used, returned, or altered. The public Negativex direct-sale window may be shorter or longer in another context; the regional source governs when its jurisdictional conditions are met.

4. Exceptions

Personalized goods may fall outside the ordinary withdrawal process when the customization was made to the customer's specification. Sealed software can have a separate exception after the seal is broken. The case must describe the actual product condition rather than rely on an item label.

5. Digital entitlements

A downloadable entitlement is assessed with the Digital Goods Policy. Download and activation are different events. If a license was activated, the operator records the activation timestamp and checks whether a signed enterprise term changes the result. A regional question does not erase the product-specific evidence requirement.

6. Premium and marketplace interaction

A Premium plan does not by itself establish a regional entitlement. A marketplace order is still processed through the marketplace channel. The case links the channel record and the regional assessment so that a plan benefit is not mistaken for a statutory baseline.

7. Enterprise terms

A signed enterprise agreement or amendment may contain a negotiated remedy. Contract Operations verifies the contract identifier, amendment number, signer or approval record, and effective date. A public policy is used as context only until the contract scope is established.

8. Evidence and escalation

Keep the order confirmation, delivery event, product condition, customer request, and jurisdictional rationale. Escalate uncertain statutory scope to the regional policy owner. Do not promise an outcome while a legal or contract review is pending. Related references include the Enterprise Contract Guide and Returns Operations Manual.
